THE YELL

happy new year!

A note from JENNA

The beginning of the year gives us an excuse to make new goals. I have never really been one to make a "new year's resolution" but several years ago as one year was ending and another was approaching, I saw a need for change in my own life and made myself what I called my "2016 Bucket List." Rather than a vague resolution, it was a list of specific things I wanted to accomplish before 2016 "kicked the bucket." That year it was about finding clarity, which included taking a hiatus from social media and sitting down to read my Bible every day. It worked well for me and helped make one of the most difficult years of my life also one of the most formative and meaningful. Since then I've continued the practice of a yearly bucket list. This year it's about better connecting with the people around me – those already in my circle and those just outside it. My "2019 Bucket List" includes things like getting together with my brother once a month, working at a coffee shop once a week, and talking to at least one person there. I'm not the most outgoing of humans, but I know that facing our fears usually helps us grow. This year is just beginning! What's on your 2019 Bucket List?
